The social criticism and satire woven throughout Mikhail Evgrafovich Saltykov-Schedrins narratives serve as a profound reflection of the socio-political landscape of his time. Saltykov-Schedrins narratives compel readers to confront uncomfortable truths, thereby reaffirming the essential role of literature in challenging and reshaping cultural and political paradigms, an endeavor that is especially significant as noted in the collective scholarly explorations of national ideology and literatures influence on its development in the Russian context (Domina et al., 2012)(University of Tartu Press, 2022).

III. Literary Style and Techniques

Mikhail Evgrafovich Saltykov-Schedrins literary style is characterized by a unique synthesis of satire and allegory, effectively illuminating the socio-political landscape of 19th-century Russia. His tales often employ a rich tapestry of metaphor and irony, allowing readers to discern deeper meanings beneath the surface narrative. In Saltykov-Schedrins work, the interplay between personal perspective and societal critique mirrors the duality inherent in these manifestos, wherein an author's ego intersects with the larger social narrative (University of Tartu Press, 2022). His deft manipulation of language not only critiques bureaucratic inefficiencies but also elevates the moral discourse surrounding the role of writers as agents of change. Overall, his literary techniques foster a compelling dialogue about the interplay of power, identity, and responsibility within a transformative cultural context.

The narrative structure in Saltykov-Schedrins works is characterized by an intricate interplay of satire and realism, effectively illuminating the socio-political fabric of 19th-century Russia. His tales often employ a circular or fragmented narrative technique, reflecting the cyclical nature of societal issues and the futility of reform efforts. The characters, frequently portrayed as grotesque caricatures, serve as vehicles for moral and philosophical inquiry, inviting the reader to engage critically with their actions and motivations. For instance, the protagonist often embodies a duality of aspiration and despair, positioning him at the intersection of individual desire and societal constraint. This duality is paramount in understanding how Saltykov-Schedrin critiques both personal and institutional moralities. Consequently, the narrative structure not only supports
