The Great Silk Road-a trade route that links the East and west from ancient times, is a unique event of the history of human development, its desire to unite and exchange with cultural values, to achieve markets for the sale of products. These roads were important before the sea, ocean roads were opened. Through this trade route, which began in the 2nd century BC from Chan'an (now Sian), China, not only silk and other valuable goods were exchanged, but also ideas, advances in science, and cultural values. Samarkand, on the other hand, has become one of the oldest and richest historical cities in the world, standing at the center of these processes and being at the crossroads of various civilizations.

The Great Silk Road adjoins Europe through Central Asia. Samarkand, due to its convenient geographical location, was an important stop for trade caravans between East and west. Through the Great Silk Road, products such as silk, spices, precious stones were brought to Samarkand, which made the city a center of trade. The city is also known as the center of Science and Culture, where exchanges were made between different peoples.

The roads from Samarkand to the east and West can be interpreted as branches of the Great Silk Road in Sugd. At the crossroads of all roads of Central Sughd, the center of Sughd stood the city of Samarkand. Therefore, it is advisable to start the analysis of the medieval roads of the territory, its directions and geography from the roads that began in Samarkand. The city of Samarkand served not only as a political center, but also as an economic and commercial center. Istakhriy "the main market and Commerce will be in rabod, a little in Shahristan. It is the trading harbor of Movarounnakhr and a gathering place for traders. Movarounnakhr reports that a large portion of the products are brought to Samarkand and spread from it to other regions" [1;158].

A major branch of the Great Silk Road, it has been referred to by a variety of names, including the "Great Khorasan road", the "Royal Road". The length of the road, from Samarkand to Bukhara, was 37 or 39 farsahs, making it a 6-or 7-day road. The distance from Samarkand (Afrosiyob) to Isbiskat Durmontepa, close to the fact that the first destination on this road is Durmontepa, located 3-3.5 km east of the present City of Juma and interpreted by experts as the ruins of the city of Isbiskat, is 24 km. At this point, it should be noted that in some studies, Isbaskat is localized to another monument, the current Navbogtepa monument. This village received water from Siyab and Karasuv canals. From the northern side of the village is the isbask gate, which is recorded in the sources through which the Zarafshan river flows.Lebedeva I localized the wall surrounding Samarkand Rabodi with the Childukhtaran monument located northwest of the Doomsday Wall[2;13-14]. Medieval Muslim sources mention Isbiskat in a nohiya (district) manner, citing that it is located 2 farsakhs away from Samarkand [3;208]. In addition, the village of Isbiskat, which is recorded as being next to the village of Isbask-Motrid in foundation documents dating from the 15th-16th centuries, is on the site of Navbogtepa and is a monument along the Great Silk Road northwest of Samarkand [4;206].

The second destination was the village of Zarmon, which is 7 farsakhs from Samarkand. According to Bartold, this village was around the village of Chimboy (Chimbayabad) in the area of present-day Pastdargom District [5;148]. The ruins of the city of Zarmon were on the site of a castle (Chimbayqala) located 600 m north of the present village of Chimboy, on the drap coast of Qoradaryo. Samarkand was considered a town located on the intersection of the Great Silk Road, which runs from south to North and from West to East. In turn, this ease provided an opportunity for the ancient Sogdians to spread their civilizations as far west as Europe and as far east as Japan. Archaeologist V.Henning and G.The khalguans believe that after the march started by Alexander The Great in the East, the Sogdians began to build public addresses in the east along the Great Silk Road. But these opinions have not been proven by historical facts. Earlier, the Sogdians had reached their civilizations to the cities of East Turkestan and China, and the Sogdian language had a special place in the Silk Road trade during this period. CA.in the 1st century BC. The widely spread Sogdian script, which appeared in the 1st century AD – the 1st century AD, also had its place and position in the history of the Silk Road. In ancient times, especially in the early Middle Ages, the Sogdian script was used in the vast territory of Eurasia, from the old Marv to Altai, Mughulistan, China and Tibet. Central Asian Sogdian inscription monuments have been found beyond Sogdian in Choch, Fargona Valley, Yettisuv. This prevalence of the Sogdian script is due to the active trade that Sogdian traders conducted on the Great Silk Road as well as the emergence of Sogdian settlements far beyond the region. This is how many finds of Sogdian texts and Manuscript texts, which are currently known in Eastern Turkestan, are explained [6].

In conclusion, Samarkand was the heart of the Great Silk Road and made an invaluable contribution to its commercial, cultural and scientific development. Even today, it occupies an important place in world civilization with its rich history and heritage.
