Introduction. Throughout all periods of human history, the development of society has not been measured solely by material wealth and economic achievements. The true development of any society has been closely connected with its spiritual image, moral criteria, and system of values. Indeed, spirituality is the foundation, the main pillar of society's development. The concept of spirituality is broad and encompasses a person's spiritual world, consciousness, way of thinking, beliefs, morals, etiquette, knowledge, and worldview. Spirituality manifests itself as an important factor that covers all aspects of human and social life, influencing them. Therefore, the role and importance of spirituality in the development of society are incomparable. Today, especially in the context of intensifying globalization processes, various spiritual threats, and ideological struggles, the issue of spirituality is becoming increasingly relevant. This is because spirituality is a solid foundation of the nation and society, a factor in preserving and developing identity.

The concept of spirituality and its essence

Spirituality is derived from the Arabic word meaning "meaning" or "set of meanings," and encompasses a person's inner world, spiritual realm, values, moral principles, and beliefs. Spirituality is the most crucial factor that makes a person human and distinguishes them from the animal kingdom. The concept of spirituality has been interpreted differently by many scholars and thinkers. For instance, the great Uzbek thinker Alisher Navoi understood spirituality as a set of human virtues and qualities of a perfect person, while Abu Rayhan Beruni associated spirituality with knowledge and science. In Sufi teachings, spirituality is interpreted as the purification of the human soul and the path to spiritual perfection. In modern understanding, spirituality is the sum of the inner world, spiritual and moral values, knowledge and worldviews, and belief principles of society members. Spirituality gives meaning to the life of an individual and society, imbuing it with purpose.

The essential components of spirituality are:

1. Moral values - a person's behavior, communication culture, and attitude towards others.
2. Educational values - knowledge, science, information, and intellectual thought.
3. Religious values - faith, religious views, and traditions.
4. Cultural values - art, literature, music, and architecture.

5. National values - customs, traditions, language, and history.

Spirituality is the most crucial factor influencing the mindset, behavior, and lifestyle of society members. Therefore, the development of any society is founded on a spiritual basis.

Spirituality and Societal Development. Societal development is a multifaceted process, not solely determined by economic growth or technological advancement. True progress is the harmonious development of both material and spiritual aspects. In this regard, spirituality manifests as the foundation of society's development, serving as its driving force.

The role of spirituality in societal development is reflected in the following aspects:

- As a factor of social stability: Spirituality is a vital element ensuring social stability in society. Among members of a spiritually mature society, qualities such as mutual respect, tolerance, and solidarity prevail. This helps prevent social conflicts, contradictions, and various social issues in society. For instance, in Uzbekistan, the "Mahalla" institution, as a unique center of spiritual and moral values, plays a significant role in maintaining social stability. The spiritual environment, neighborliness, compassion, and mutual assistance fostered in the mahalla strengthen social cohesion in society.

- Economic development and work culture: One of the important aspects of spirituality is the attitude towards work, work culture, and engagement in honest professions. In a society with a high level of spirituality, labor is glorified, livelihood earned through honest work is valued, and entrepreneurship, business acumen, and creativity are encouraged. Today, the experience of developed countries shows that moral factors - such as work discipline, responsibility, honesty, and conscientiousness - are crucial conditions for economic development. For example, traditional Eastern spiritual values played a significant role in the "economic miracle" of countries like Japan and South Korea.

- Spirituality and innovative development: Innovations, novelties, and creative activities play a vital role in societal progress. In a spiritually rich society, science, education, creativity, and intellectual potential are valued, while new thinking and innovative ideas are encouraged. History testifies that periods of spiritual upliftment were closely connected with advancements in scientific discoveries, architecture, art, and literature. For instance, during the Middle Ages, the Eastern Renaissance period and the European Renaissance were associated with spiritual and educational upsurges in society.

- Spirituality and governance effectiveness: The efficiency of the public administration system plays a crucial role in societal development. In a spiritually healthy society, the activities of government bodies are founded on the principles of justice, integrity, and the rule of law. Vices such as corruption in the management system and abuse of official positions are indicators of moral decline.

The prevalence of spiritual and moral criteria in the system of public administration positively influences societal development. For instance, in countries like Singapore and Sweden, spiritual and moral education plays a significant role in combating corruption.

Spirituality and personal growth. At the core of societal development lies the spiritual maturity of each individual. Spiritually mature people direct their efforts not only towards personal interests but also for the benefit of society. The life goals of such individuals comprise not only the accumulation of material wealth but also noble pursuits such as spiritual perfection, acquiring knowledge, and benefiting others. In a spiritually rich society, all conditions are created for individual development, and the education system is geared not only towards mastering a profession but also towards spiritual and moral growth.

In today's world, the processes of globalization are intensifying. These processes are also affecting the sphere of spirituality. On one hand, globalization creates opportunities for expanding cultural and spiritual connections between peoples and countries and for learning from advanced experiences. On the other hand, it also brings the risk of eroding spiritual values and losing national identity.

The main problems in the sphere of spirituality and ways to combat them are as follows:

Developing spiritual immunity. Spiritual immunity is the ability to withstand various harmful ideas, immorality, and destructive influences that threaten one's spirituality. By developing spiritual immunity, it is possible to protect members of society, especially young people, from various harmful influences. The education system, family, mahalla, mass media, and other social institutions play an important role in the development of spiritual immunity. Cooperation and unity among them increase the effectiveness of spiritual education.

The development of spirituality is an important condition for the progress of society. In this regard, the following areas are of priority importance: Improving the education system, restoring and developing national spiritual values, strengthening spiritual and educational outreach work, and studying and promoting spiritual heritage.

Conclusion. Spirituality is the foundation of society's development and its driving force. A spiritually rich society can achieve high results in economic, social, political, and cultural spheres. Therefore, developing spirituality, restoring and enriching spiritual and moral values, and fostering a healthy spiritual worldview among the population, especially young people, is a priority task for every society. Through reforms in the sphere of spirituality, strengthening spiritual and educational work, and restoring and developing national values, it is possible to elevate society's development to a new level. Indeed, spirituality is a solid foundation for the progress of society.
