Annotation. The article examines the role and importance of silat ar-rahm (maintaining family ties) in society based on Qur'anic verses and Hadiths.
Silat ar-rahm is presented as a significant universal religious concept aimed at strengthening relationships with relatives, fostering compassion, and reinforcing family bonds. The Qur'an places special emphasis on the importance of silat ar-rahm, highlighting the necessity of generosity, support, and mutual assistance among close relations. The Hadiths also stress the establishment of silat ar-rahm, strengthening inter-family solidarity, and maintaining peace and order in society. Both the Qur'an and Hadiths recognize the importance of maintaining family ties, emphasizing that fulfilling this duty is not only a familial responsibility but also a broader moral obligation. Silat ar-rahm plays a vital role in fostering social cohesion, prosperity, and healthy relationships within society. It holds significance not only from a religious perspective but also in ensuring social stability, improving interpersonal connections, and providing support to those in need. Fulfilling the duty of silat ar-rahm properly is considered not only a reflection of one's faith but also an invaluable contribution to the stability of society.

Introduction. One of the most important sources of support in a person's life is their relationship with close relatives. Family and kinship ties provide not only spiritual but also emotional and physical strength to an individual. When facing life's challenges, a person relies on spiritual and emotional bonds, which strengthen the sense of security and trust. Therefore, kinship ties play a crucial role in ensuring mutual harmony and unity. Sincere communication, mutual support, and expressions of compassion among relatives are essential in overcoming life's difficult trials. Such bonds reinforce harmony and solidarity among people, contributing to the stability of social relations. Promoting kindness, humanity, and cooperation among relatives creates significant opportunities for enhancing the spiritual stability and social cohesion of society. In Islamic teachings, maintaining kinship ties is not only regarded as a personal act of worship but also as a key factor in ensuring social harmony. The Holy Qur'an and Sunnah emphasize the necessity of strengthening these relationships through numerous verses and hadiths. Islamic sources elevate the act of restoring and improving family relations to the level of worship, while breaking or severing them is strongly condemned.

Maintaining ties with relatives is one of the most essential components of Islamic teachings. Its essence lies in strengthening social justice, restoring moral values, and ensuring stability within society.

In the establishment of mutual harmony in society, kinship ties and relationships have held significant importance since ancient times and are considered a moral and spiritual category. As a naturally social being, a human is dependent on others, and one's sense of happiness in life is directly related to the strength and positivity of ties between relatives. Kinship is not only a social and familial bond but, in Islamic teachings, is emphasized as a moral and spiritual duty. In today's Uzbek society, expressions of kinship such as celebrating holidays together, mutual compassion and respect, and hospitality are of great importance and are considered essential factors in ensuring peace and harmony within families. Good relationships are especially important in sharing joy and happiness, and in overcoming sorrow and hardships, as they support both individuals and families in society. No matter how distant relatives may be, they should strive to maintain their relationships, love one another, show kindness and compassion, offer material and spiritual support, and take initiative in helping one another during times of difficulty. In Islam, kinship ties are referred to as silat ar-rahm, which is regarded as one of the core foundations of the religion. It is based on strengthening relationships among family members through love, respect, and empathy, thereby reinforcing social bonds.

Material and Methods. "Silat ar-Rahm" (صلة الرحم) is an Arabic term, where the word "sila" means "to connect" or "relationship," and "rahm" literally means "womb," which in a figurative sense refers to "blood ties" or "kinship bonds among people" (İslâm Ansiklopedisi, 2009:112-113). Together, these words convey the general meaning of "maintaining kinship relations". Silat ar-Rahm is a moral concept that refers to preserving family ties, visiting relatives, and establishing good relationships among kin. It is explained as "the kinship ties created through blood relations and marriage," and it includes actions such as maintaining these ties, interacting with relatives, protecting their rights, showing interest in them, doing good to them, offering help, and visiting them.

Although the word rahm does not appear in the Qur'an in its singular form, its plural form "arhām" (أرحام) is used in several verses, such as Surah Āl ʿImrān (3:6), Surah Al-Anʿām (6:143), and Surah Ar-Raʿd (13:8). Additionally, the Arabic word "al-aqrabā'" (الأقرباء), meaning "relatives," is derived from the root "qurb" (قرب), which signifies "closeness." Several Qur'anic verses that contain this root, such as Surah Al-Baqarah (2:83, 177), Surah An-Nisā' (4:36), and Surah Ash-Shūrā (42:23), emphasize responsibilities toward relatives (İslâm Ansiklopedisi, 1989:285–287).

In Islamic sources, the concept of silat ar-rahm is often associated with the term birr (بِرّ), an Arabic word that encompasses meanings such as "goodness," "kindness," "love," "piety," "helping those in need," "charity," and "benevolence." Birr refers to treating others with good character, showing mercy, doing good deeds, and being loyal. Scholars also describe birr as a continuous act that is free of sin. Therefore, the concept of birr not only includes active family engagement but also embraces broader moral and virtuous conduct. Fulfilling silat ar-rahm by adhering to the principles of birr involves forgiving relatives, helping those in need, and demonstrating compassion and mercy.

In the collections of hadith, the importance of maintaining kinship ties is compiled under headings such as "Silat ar-Rahm," "Birr al-Walidayn wa Silat ar-Rahm," "Kitab al-Adab," and "Kitab al-Birr wa al-Sila." These sections emphasize the significance of kinship and command its observance. Severing ties with relatives is considered a serious offense, and individuals are urged to be mindful of maintaining these relationships.

Even if one lives or works far from their relatives, keeping in touch, offering help when needed, visiting the sick, showing concern during difficult times, congratulating them on happy occasions, and offering comfort during hardships – all fall under the practice of silat ar-rahm. These acts of human virtue strengthen spiritual connections among relatives, foster unity, and help prevent illnesses and conflicts that may arise from selfishness and loneliness.

In the Qur'an, there are numerous verses emphasizing that every person must be mindful of their closest relations – parents, relatives, friends, and even those in need – and should offer them both material and spiritual support. Specifically, Surah An-Nisa (4:36) states: “Be good to parents, relatives, orphans, the needy, the near neighbor, the distant neighbor, the companion at your side, the traveler, and those whom your right hands possess” (Abdulaziz Mansur, 2009:84), listing those around us who deserve kindness and material assistance. In another verse, Surah Al-Isra (17:26), it is said: “Give to the relative his right, and [also] to the needy and the traveler, and do not spend wastefully” (Abdulaziz Mansur, 2009:284), encouraging generosity while discouraging extravagance. The Qur’an gives special emphasis to kindness toward relatives and fulfilling their rights. Particularly in Surah Ar-Rum (30:38) and Surah An-Nahl (16:90) (Abdulaziz Mansur, 2009:408; 277), Allah directly commands believers to give relatives their due rights.

The six major hadith collections also include separate chapters dedicated to the importance of being good to parents. In these collections, the following numbers of hadiths on this topic are narrated: 11 in Sahih al-Bukhari, 13 in Sahih Muslim, 9 in Sunan Abu Dawood, 10 in Sunan Tirmidhi, and 8 in Sunan Ibn Majah specifically urging kindness toward parents. Islamic sources emphasize the importance of family ties, encouraging kindness to relatives and warning against offending or harming them. In this regard, Surah An-Nisa (4:1) (Abdulaziz Mansur, 2009:77) states that one should avoid disrespecting Allah and neglecting the rights of relatives. Islamic scholars, based on this verse and other related verses and hadiths, emphasize that maintaining the ties of kinship is a compulsory act (Seyda Muhammed Emin, 2019:181). Even if kindness is met with ill-treatment from relatives, it is essential to continue maintaining family ties, not seeking fault with them, and continuing to offer goodwill. Regarding this, a hadith narrated from Abu Hurayra (may Allah be pleased with him) states: “A man said: 'O Messenger of Allah! I have relatives. I keep good relations with them, but they cut me off. I do good to them, but they do evil to me. I am patient with them, but they act ignorantly toward me.' The Prophet (peace be upon him) said: 'If you have done as you say, it is as though you are feeding them hot ash. As long as you continue in this way, there will be a helper from Allah with you against them”. (Sahih Muslim, https://dorar.net/hadith/sharh/17099). This hadith instructs to continue doing good to relatives regardless of the situation.

Scientific research shows that most family problems arise from the failure to properly recognize or fulfill people's rights. If one person among siblings cuts off family ties for some reason or excuse, this situation can negatively affect the other relatives as well. In reality, there should be no reason or excuse for breaking family ties. If someone has broken family relations as a result of arguments over inheritance or even violence, they should sincerely apologize for their actions, refrain from repeating them, and increase their good deeds. Maintaining family ties (Silai Rahm) is an act of kindness, and abandoning kindness leads to the severing of relationships. Abulhasan Ali ibn Muhammad al-Mawardi (d. 1058) defines Silai Rahm as «spending wealth on any good deed and helping without expecting any benefit» (Mawardi, 1978:183). Mubarakfuri (d. 1353) also explains Silai Rahm as «showing closeness to relatives, showing compassion to them, and doing good to them» (Muhammad Abdurahman ibn Abdurahim Mubarakfuri, 1990:25). Avoiding evil and striving not to harm others is also considered a good deed. All these acts of goodness are regarded as «Sadaqah» (charity). A Muslim should not only be a good person but also wish well for others, recommend kindness, and guide others to do good.

Results. The concept of Silai Rahm primarily applies to relatives, but in a broader sense, it also refers to maintaining good relationships with soldiers, friends, and colleagues. Specifically, even if people do not know each other, greeting one another, giving up seats for the elderly, maintaining friendly relations, and using kind words in social interactions are all examples of human virtues related to Silai Rahm. In general, Silai Rahm means showing compassion and kindness to all people and all creatures. Checking on the well-being of those in need and offering them love and care is also considered Silai Rahm. If a person shows Silai Rahm to those in need, Allah will bless them with abundance in their earnings. Islam places great emphasis on Silai Rahm, and numerous verses and hadiths address this topic. The virtues, importance, and necessity of Silai Rahm are frequently acknowledged in the hadiths of the Prophet (peace be upon him), and in the verses describing the main qualities of believers, their ties with their relatives and kin are especially highlighted. In contemporary times, some negative situations related to Silai Rahm have been observed. After the death of parents, disputes over property or land often arise between siblings, leading to deteriorating relationships, estrangement, and even alienation from one another. Additionally, the weakening of communication or failing to check on each other in such situations becomes a social issue. As these situations do not align with Islamic moral standards, it is crucial to address them and work towards strengthening family relationships. The rulings in the Qur'an and hadith teach us to be kind, compassionate, and merciful towards our parents and relatives. A Muslim is commanded to show kindness even to non-Muslim relatives. Similarly, a Muslim should maintain a good relationship with relatives who may be rude or unpleasant. Checking on distant relatives, reaching out to them, and re-establishing connections with them are high human virtues. According to this virtue, a relative is not one who merely shares blood, but one who restores the ties of kinship. Regarding this, the Prophet (peace be upon him) said: “One who responds to their relative’s goodness is not the one who connects the ties of kinship. But the one who reconnects the ties after they have been severed is the true one who maintains Silai Rahm”. (Narrated by Imam Bukhari) (Muhammad Madaniy, 2018:80). From this hadith, it is clear that no matter how relatives treat one another, the person who preserves the kinship ties and restores relationships on the basis of mutual respect is the true one who maintains Silai Rahm. The relationship between relatives should be based on goodness and patience.

Another proof of the importance of maintaining family ties in Islam is the following hadith: Abu Huraira (may Allah be pleased with him) narrated that the Prophet (peace be upon him) said: «Whoever believes in Allah and the Last Day, let him honor his guest. Whoever believes in Allah and the Last Day, let him maintain the ties of kinship. Whoever believes in Allah and the Last Day, let him speak good words or remain silent.» (Narrated by Imam Bukhari). Honoring guests, maintaining family ties, and speaking good words are aspects of a person's character, and they spread love and compassion among people. Whoever does not sever family ties, but strives to assist relatives in need and looks after their interests, will find their provision expanded and their life lengthened. The person who maintains Silai Rahm (family ties) will enjoy many blessings in this world and will be rewarded with great rewards in the Hereafter. Anas ibn Malik (may Allah be pleased with him) narrated: «Whoever desires his provision to be expanded and his life to be lengthened, let him maintain the ties of kinship.» (Narrated by Bukhari and Tirmidhi). In a hadith narrated by Jubayr ibn Mut'im, he said: «I heard the Messenger of Allah (peace be upon him) say: 'The one who severs the ties of kinship will not enter Paradise.'« (Narrated by Bukhari) (Adabul Mufrad, 2021:189). This hadith points out that those who deliberately neglect to do good to their relatives and are negligent towards them, despite having the ability, may distance themselves from Allah's mercy. The purpose of this warning is to encourage people to maintain family ties and to strengthen social unity. In a narration from Ali ibn Abu Talib (may Allah be pleased with him), he said: “Whoever wishes for his life to be expanded, his provision to be increased, and to be saved from a bad death, let him fear Allah and maintain the ties of kinship". (Narrated by Abdullah ibn Imam Ahmad and Bazzar)

Discussion. Silai Rahm (maintaining family ties) is considered a form of worship that brings numerous rewards and its reward is given very quickly in this world. In a hadith narrated by Ibn Hibb, the Prophet (peace be upon him) said, «Among all acts of worship, the reward for maintaining family ties is the quickest to arrive.» Silai Rahm has several levels, and the lowest level includes speaking kindly to our relatives, greeting them with a smile, not neglecting to greet them, asking about their well-being when we meet them, thinking good thoughts about them, and wishing them well. The next level is visiting them and offering help in various matters, especially by providing physical assistance to ease their burdens. The highest and most important level is providing material help to relatives, as narrated by Abu Huraira (may Allah be pleased with him), where the Prophet (peace be upon him) said, «The best charity is the one given when you have more than enough. Each of you should start with those under your care» (Sunan Darimi, 2023:24). This hadith emphasizes that one should first meet the needs of their own family and give any surplus wealth as charity. In Surah Baqara (2:215), it is stated, «Whatever good you spend, it should be for your parents, relatives, orphans, the needy, and travelers» (Abdulaziz Mansur, 2009:33). Similarly, in Surah Saba' (34:39), it is mentioned, «If you give something to those in need, Allah will compensate it» (Abdulaziz Mansur, 2009:432). The measure of goodness is clearly outlined in the Qur'an. In Surah Baqara (2:197), it says, «Whatever good deeds you do, indeed Allah knows them,» and in Surah Zalzalah (99:7), it is stated, «So whoever does an atom's weight of good will see it.» Likewise, in Surah Jasiya (45:15), it is said, «Whoever does good, it is for his own benefit.» These Qur'anic verses highlight that any righteous action that benefits others is considered a great virtue (Abdulaziz Mansur, 2009:31; 2009:599; 2009:500).

Helping needy relatives is not only about providing material assistance, but also strengthens relationships between people. This, in turn, enhances unity and solidarity within society. Charity given to relatives not only supports them financially, but also increases love and affection between hearts. The Prophet (peace be upon him) also emphasized that doing good begins with close relatives. In a hadith, he said: «Charity given to the poor is one charity, but charity given to a relative is twofold: charity and maintaining family ties» (Sunan Darimi, 2023:24). The hadith highlights that charity given to relatives has more reward than charity given to others, as the charity to relatives also maintains family bonds, thus earning double reward. Strengthening relationships with relatives through charity is considered one of the most important aspects, as it includes not only financial help but also spiritual virtues. Allah has created opportunities and means for the forgiveness of people's sins, and maintaining family ties (silai rahm) is one of the ways to cleanse oneself from certain sins. Some mistakes and sins of a person can be forgiven through charity and good deeds done with sincere intentions. Doing good is an act where one gives something without expecting any personal gain, purely based on the opportunity available. Charity and good deeds are not limited to wealth alone; they can also be done through simple acts such as giving advice, stopping harm, or offering help. These acts not only improve the situation in society but also lead to spiritual purification of the individual. It is narrated from Tawus: «A person has three hundred sixty joints. For every joint, charity is required daily. Doing good deeds is charity, turning away from bad deeds is charity, greeting someone with peace is charity, removing harmful things from the road is charity, and helping someone onto a mount is charity.» Ibn Tawus added, «Even a kind word is charity» (Yaxshilik va Silai Rahm, 2021:91). Every person should do good with their hands, tongue, wealth, even a smile, a pleasant face, or a kind word. Depending on the intention, every act of goodness, whether big or small, is written as charity.

It is narrated from Hakim ibn Hizom that the Prophet (peace be upon him) said, “The best charity is the one given from excess wealth, and the upper hand is better than the lower hand. Begin charity with those under your care”. This hadith emphasizes that the best act is to help those in need with whatever one can, as much as possible. The Prophet (peace be upon him) instructed in previous hadiths about the order of giving charity and kindness, stressing that one should first take care of their family, relatives, and close ones. When family members are in need of financial or other assistance, it is advisable to first meet the needs of one’s household. It is narrated from Abu Musa Ash’ari (may Allah be pleased with him) that the Prophet (peace be upon him) said, “Every Muslim has a charity owed to them.” The companions asked, “What if they do not have the means?” He replied, “If they work with their hands, they will benefit themselves and also give charity”. They asked, “What if they cannot do that or do not have the means?” He replied, “They help those in need who are in difficult situations.” They asked, “What if they cannot do that or do not have the means?” He replied, “They command good.” They asked, “What if they cannot do that or do not have the means?” He replied, “They refrain from evil, and that in itself is charity for them” (Yaxshilik va Silai Rahm, 2021:96).

In the hadith, the Prophet (peace be upon him) emphasizes that every Muslim has a charity owed to them, highlighting that giving charity is not limited to financial help, but also refers to the social and ethical responsibilities that every individual must fulfill in their daily life. Through the questions and answers presented in the hadith, the different forms of charity and its social role are explained. It is shown that for someone who does not have financial means, it is necessary to work with their hands, benefiting themselves and others. Through their profession or craft, a person should benefit not only themselves but also society. By working, a person can fulfill not only their financial responsibilities but also their social duties. Calling others to good helps improve social order, ensuring tranquility and peace within the community.

In the Quran, Allah commands mutual tolerance and forgiveness. In Surah Al-A'raf, verse 199, Allah says, “Hold to forgiveness”, calling people to be forgiving towards each other, emphasizing that this concept is one of the core principles of Islam. There are numerous hadiths narrated from the Prophet (peace be upon him) regarding mutual compassion and mercy. Specifically, it is narrated from Abu Hurayra (may Allah be pleased with him): «The Prophet (peace be upon him) was sitting with Aqra' ibn Habis Taymi when he kissed Hasan ibn Ali. Aqra' said, “I have ten children, but I have never kissed any of them”. The Prophet (peace be upon him) looked at him and said, “He who does not show mercy will not be shown mercy” (Bukhari, Abu Dawood, and Tirmidhi narrated) (Muhammad Sadiq Muhammad Yusuf, 2021:232).

Prophet Muhammad (peace be upon him) emphasized that the value and status of a person are determined not by wealth, social position, or power, but by their good character and piety. He called on people to resolve conflicts peacefully, help settle disputes, and assist in reconciliation. He even stated that this behavior is superior to fasting and prayer, saying, “Shall I tell you something that is better than fasting, prayer, and charity?” When asked, “Yes, O Messenger of Allah”, he replied, “Reconciliation between people, for discord between people destroys the roots of religion” (Sunan Abu Dawood).

In Islam, human social rights are of great importance. The Quran and Hadiths contain many teachings regarding how to treat others, maintain respect and kindness, and preserve their rights. Protecting human dignity, ensuring justice, and helping the needy are key objectives in Islam. Therefore, humiliating a person's dignity or disrespecting their rights is considered one of the gravest sins in Islam.

Acknowledgement. Silai Rahm (maintaining family ties) is one of the factors that can lead to the severing of family relationships and seriously affect a person's mental state and ethics. One of the key emotions involved in this process is the desire of nafs (self-interest) and greed, which are connected to an excessive interest in personal gain and material wealth. These feelings often lead to a breakdown in relationships between people. Nafs triggers the feeling of prioritizing one's self and personal interests, which leads to the cooling of interpersonal connections. For example, in times of financial or personal difficulties, a person dominated by nafs may not pay sufficient attention to the needs of their relatives. In Surah Taghabun, verse 16, it is stated: "And whoever guards against the greed of the soul, it is those who will be successful" (Abdulaziz Mansur, 2009:557). This verse instructs people to control these feelings. Individuals must develop conscious approaches to perceive and manage nafs and greed. This will not only help maintain family relationships but also contribute to creating a harmonious and united environment within society.

The Prophet (peace be upon him) consistently called for unity among people. Specifically, it is narrated by Abdullah ibn Amr (may Allah be pleased with him) that the Messenger of Allah (peace be upon him) said: «A true Muslim is one who does not harm other Muslims with his hands or his tongue» (Sahih Bukhari). This hadith particularly emphasizes the importance of being cautious with one's hands and tongue (narrated by Imam Bukhari). In another hadith, the Prophet (peace be upon him) warned against causing harm to others or committing suicide, saying, «Whoever kills a person with whom they have a treaty (a non-Muslim), will never smell the fragrance of Paradise, and indeed its fragrance can be smelled from a distance of forty years» (Bukhari, Tirmidhi narrated). These hadiths highlight the importance of avoiding moral and social vices, promoting mutual unity, and fostering peace. By doing so, the spiritual connections between individuals are strengthened, and the ethical norms aimed at reducing selfishness, isolation, and other social problems in society are emphasized.

Conclusion. One of the important issues given great attention in Islam is the relationships with relatives, which should be based on mutual respect, kindness, and cooperation. Both the Qur'an and the Sunnah emphasize that doing good to relatives is not only a moral duty but also a legal responsibility. Silai rahm (maintaining family ties) is recognized as a noble virtue that leads to the fastest and greatest reward, and it helps to create an environment of trust, love, and mutual support within the family and society. The essence of silai rahm involves establishing relationships with relatives based on mutual respect and love, sharing in their happiness, expressing sympathy in their misfortunes, helping those in need, regularly visiting relatives, refraining from causing harm to them, and forgiving past wrongs.

Furthermore, silai rahm helps to eliminate envy and hostility from the heart, fostering an environment of peace and unity. This has a positive impact on a person's mental state. Being in close contact with family members and relatives, feeling their support and affection, helps maintain emotional stability and protects against stress and depression. The importance of kindness, compassion, and silai rahm has always been emphasized in society. In particular, the current efforts made by the government to support underprivileged families, orphans, and elderly people, as well as the charity and donations made by entrepreneurs and businessmen in Uzbekistan to help the needy, are clear evidence of the widespread practice of silai rahm.
