Abstract: This article analyzes the development process of social pedagogy, its stages, main directions and current state based on the changes that have occurred in the social life of Uzbekistan during the years of independence. It also covers reforms and current problems in the system of training social pedagogical personnel.

Keywords: social pedagogy, independence, upbringing, reform, education, personnel, civil society.

After the Republic of Uzbekistan gained independence in 1991, fundamental reforms began in all aspects of social life. These reforms included socio-cultural spheres, in particular, the education and upbringing system. In the history of Uzbekistan, social pedagogy began to take shape as a separate direction during the years of independence. Through this discipline, a scientific and practical approach was formed to such urgent issues as social problems in society, socialization of youth, moral education, social protection of disabled people and orphans.

1. The concept and relevance of social pedagogy

Social pedagogy is a science and practice that includes the adaptation of a person in a social environment, the formation of the ability to cope with social problems, spiritual and moral education, the development of civic consciousness, and work with people belonging to socially vulnerable groups.

In today's globalization environment, the intensification of the Internet and information flows, migration, unemployment, crime, and the increase in social instability among young people have further increased the relevance of social pedagogy.

2. The formation of social pedagogy in the early years of independence (1991–2000)

In the early 1990s, social pedagogy was still a new field. The concept of "education" that existed during the Soviet era was not inextricably linked with the social environment. After independence, the following changes took place: In 1992, the Constitution of Uzbekistan established education and upbringing as a legal basis.

Through the Law "On Education" and the "National Program for Personnel Training" adopted in 1997, the spheres of education, spirituality, and enlightenment were elevated to the level of state policy.

In Uzbekistan, the creation of a healthy social environment based on national and religious values, the restructuring of the social protection system, and the implementation of the principles of social justice increased the need for social pedagogy.

. 3. The stage of development of social pedagogy (2001–2016)

At this stage, social pedagogy was introduced into the higher education system as an academic discipline. Also: Bachelor's and master's degree programs in the field of "Social Pedagogy" were organized at pedagogical institutes. Textbooks and manuals on social pedagogy (for example, "Fundamentals of Social Pedagogy") were published.

Social pedagogues began to work mainly in schools, orphanages, vocational colleges, and neighborhood citizens' meetings. Experience in working with children with disabilities and adolescents in socially vulnerable groups was developed.

Also, the formation of civil society institutions expanded the practical scope of social pedagogy. Cooperation was established with NGOs, youth organizations, and women's committees.

4. Modern era: radical renewal of social pedagogy (2017–present)

The reforms carried out under the leadership of President Shavkat Mirziyoyev have made social pedagogy one of the main directions of state policy:2019: Law "On Youth Policy", improvement of the system of work with youth.

2021–2022: Education and social support systems have been strengthened through the "Centers for Spirituality and Enlightenment", "Mehr-Saxovat" events. The "Agency for Social Services" has been established, and the activities of professional social pedagogues are supported by the state. Psychological services and social services are provided jointly.

Social monitoring systems based on digital technologies have been established (for example, the "Temurbeklar Maktabi", "Mahalla" platforms). Today, social pedagogy plays an important role in working with children, youth, women, the elderly and persons in need of social protection.

The following problems exist in the development of social pedagogy:

•• Quality issues in the training of social pedagogues;

•• Gap between theoretical knowledge and practice;

•• Lack of funding and technical base;

•• Limited exchange of local and international experience.

Solutions:

• Digital transformation of social pedagogy (online services, remote psychopedagogical support);

• International cooperation (within UNICEF, UNESCO);

• Strengthening the role of social pedagogue in inclusive education;

• Introduction of a social pedagogue position in each school.

During the years of independence, social pedagogy was formed in Uzbekistan as a new and relevant field. Historically, this discipline was previously considered only within the framework of the educational system, but today it has become a complex system that includes work in a broader social context - civil society, social justice, people with disabilities and groups in need of social protection.

The discussion identifies the following:

The direct impact of state policy: Laws, programs, and presidential decrees adopted after independence played a decisive role in the development of social pedagogy. In particular, the “National Program for Personnel Training” became a key document in this regard.

Practice and practitioners of social pedagogy: Educators work in schools, colleges, neighborhoods, and social service centers, working directly with students, young people, and citizens in need. Their practical activities are still not fully systematized, but efforts in this area are intensifying.

Scientific and methodological support: In recent years, textbooks and manuals on social pedagogy have been created, but they still do not fully cover modern experience and digital technologies.

Compatibility with global trends: Compared with the international experience of social pedagogy, Uzbekistan still lags behind in this area, but significant progress is being made in the areas of inclusive education, psychosocial services, and overcoming crises in the family environment.

The development of social pedagogy is closely related to reforms in the education system, and since the 1990s, the teaching of social pedagogy in higher education institutions has begun, and the methodological and scientific bases have been strengthened. Also, effective methods of working with groups in need of social protection, youth, and people with disabilities have been developed.

Laws and programs adopted by the state (for example, the Law "On Education", the Law "On Youth Policy", the "National Program for Personnel Training") have strengthened the legal framework of social pedagogy and expanded the scope of its activities. These documents have served to increase the position of social pedagogues in society, improve their professional qualifications.

During the discussion, it should be noted that along with the development of social pedagogy, there are also problems of personnel shortages, lack of scientific research and innovative approaches in the field. The need to improve the professional qualifications of practicing pedagogues, and introduce new methods and technologies is increasing day by day.
As a result, Social Pedagogy was recognized as an independent discipline and found its place in the higher education system. This created the necessary basis for socially oriented professions.
The scope of social pedagogical activity has expanded - now it is actively used not only in educational institutions, but also in mahallas, societies for the disabled, orphanages, and penal institutions.
Social pedagogical approaches are used in working with youth, women, and persons in need of social protection, which contributes to the formation of a healthy social environment.
State support and the regulatory and legal framework have been strengthened, which contributes to raising the status of social pedagogues.
Recommendations for the future:
• Modern digital resources and training platforms should be developed for the field of social pedagogy.
• A system of advanced training of specialists should be introduced within the framework of local and international cooperation.
• The practice of organizing a social pedagogue staff in each general secondary educational institution should be expanded
During the period of independent Uzbekistan, social pedagogy has been consistently developing as a science and practice. Today, it is not only a means of finding solutions to social problems, but also an important tool for raising a harmonious generation, strengthening civil society, and creating a healthy social environment. In the future, this area needs to be improved based on international experience, enriched with professional qualifications and innovative approaches.
After Uzbekistan gained independence, profound changes occurred in the social sphere, including in the system of upbringing and education. It was in this historical context that the science of social pedagogy was formed and consistently developed in response to new social needs. Educational reforms, legal framework, state programs, and the activation of civil society gave social pedagogy a new direction and content.
Today, social pedagogues perform such urgent tasks as working with young people, supporting people belonging to socially vulnerable groups, providing moral and spiritual education and social adaptation. The development of social pedagogy in Uzbekistan is one of the important factors in building a civil society, raising a spiritually mature generation and ensuring social equality.
For the further development of this area in the future, it is necessary to deepen the scientific and methodological foundations, study international experience, introduce innovative approaches to practice and increase the potential of pedagogical personnel.
