Introduction: Although the road to Arabic language is challenging, teaching Arabic to non-native speakers is incredibly rewarding. The pronunciation of the words, the right sound of letters and memorizing all 4 or 2 types of each letter might sound difficult. Despite it's complexity, it should not be the reason to give up Arabic language. Undoubtedly, with the right methods, it can be taught and learned effectively and engagingly.

There are several ways to make this linguistic journey easier for learners. Here are some of the effective strategies for Arabic teachers:

1. Starting with the Sounds: It is highly recommended for teachers to start teaching Arabic to English speakers with Arabic alphabet as it is done in the English learning process. That is to say, whenever people learn English, they firstly memorize the English alphabet with the rhythm of the music about alphabet. The same is recommended with Arabic alphabet, make it interesting and memorable. Secondly, begin with pronunciation, focusing on individual sounds and their proper articulation.

2. Introducing the Script Gradually: It is recommended not to overwhelm students with the entire alphabet at once. However,starting with the most common letters (أ , ب, ت) and gradually introducing more complex forms.

3. Practical Communication: It is recommended to begin with basic communicative activities like greetings, dialogues, and simpleconversations. If in English, learners start with "Hi!" or "How are you?" but in Arabic they start with "مرحبا" (Marḥaban) - Hi, and "كيف حالك؟" (Kayfa ḥāluk?) - How are you?.

Conclusion: Teaching demands significant effort and patience. While English, a global lingua franca with two billion speakers, is widely studied, this article explored basic effective methods for teaching Arabic for native English speakers.
