According to the World Tourism Organization, gastronomic tourism has developed significantly over the past decade and is now one of the most dynamic and creative sectors of tourism worldwide. According to researchers, with more than a third of tourists spending on food, local cuisine is becoming one of the most important aspects that determine the quality of people's travel experience. In addition, Gheorghe et al. (2014) noted that tourists now have enough time and budget to travel, so most people are looking for new experiences, not just places or souvenirs, during their trips. Gastronomic tourism offers such an experience because gastronomy embodies local culture, heritage, history, agriculture, etc. This has been a significant driving force contributing to the rapid development of global food tourism over recent decades, making both tourist destinations and tourism companies aware of the importance of gastronomy in diversifying tourism and promoting local, regional and national development (UNWTO, 2012).

It is important to note that the long-term strategy for the development of gastronomic tourism in Uzbekistan includes a comprehensive and multifaceted approach aimed at preserving and promoting the country's rich culinary heritage, while ensuring sustainable economic growth. The long-term strategy for the development of gastronomic tourism can include various directions to create an environment in which gastronomic tourism can make a significant contribution to the overall tourism industry in Uzbekistan. These include the following directions:

1. Culinary heritage preservation. It is important to create a solid foundation for documenting, preserving and promoting the diverse culinary heritage of Uzbekistan. Culinary heritage preservation in the development of gastronomic tourism includes the preservation, documentation and promotion of traditional dishes, recipes, cooking techniques and the cultural significance of local cuisines. Key aspects of culinary heritage preservation in the context of gastronomic tourism development include documentation of traditional recipes, culinary archives and libraries, We can include oral histories and interviews, culinary kitchens and training programs, culinary festivals and events, culinary tourism trails, promotion of local ingredients, culinary museums and exhibitions, culinary storytelling and integrations with media, educational institutions.

Recording and cataloging traditional recipes that have been passed down through generations is an important aspect of preserving culinary heritage. This documentation ensures the authenticity of local dishes and helps share these recipes with a wider audience, including tourists interested in exploring traditional cuisine.

Culinary archives and libraries include the establishment of culinary archives and libraries dedicated to preserving historical cookbooks, manuscripts, and records related to traditional cuisine. These resources serve as valuable repositories of culinary knowledge, allowing researchers, chefs, and enthusiasts to explore the historical roots of local cuisines.

Oral histories and interviews can include interviews with local chefs, home cooks, and community members who have knowledge of traditional cooking practices. Oral histories provide insight into the cultural context of dishes, regional variations, and the importance of certain ingredients in local cuisines.

Culinary festivals and events can include the holding of culinary festivals and events that celebrate traditional foods and cooking methods. These gatherings are a platform to showcase local culinary talent, and to attract local and international audiences interested in learning about and experiencing the gastronomic heritage of a region. Culinary tourism routes involve the development of culinary tourism routes that guide visitors through regions known for specific culinary specialties. These routes highlight local food traditions, historical connections to specific dishes, and the cultural stories behind the ingredients used in traditional recipes.

Promoting local ingredients can include encouraging the use of local and indigenous sources in traditional recipes. This not only supports local farmers and producers, but also contributes to the authenticity of gastronomic experiences by highlighting the unique flavors and characteristics of regional cuisine.

Culinary museums and exhibitions can include the establishment of culinary museums and exhibitions that showcase the history of local cuisines, the evolution of cooking tools, and the cultural significance of various dishes. These institutions provide educational resources for both locals and tourists interested in the culinary heritage of the region.

Culinary storytelling and media are manifested in the use of storytelling through various media channels, including documentaries, books, and online platforms, to share stories about the history and cultural significance of traditional foods. This helps to build awareness and appreciation for the culinary heritage of a destination.

Is reflected in collaboration with educational institutions to include culinary heritage preservation in curricula related to hospitality, tourism, and culinary arts. This will ensure that future generations of chefs and tourism professionals are equipped with the knowledge and appreciation to preserve and promote culinary heritage.

In the context of gastronomic tourism, preserving culinary heritage not only adds cultural depth to the visitor experience, but also contributes to the sustainable development of local communities and economies. It allows for a deeper understanding of the cultural identity of a destination through food traditions .

2. Skills development and training. Investing in the training of local chefs and professionals is essential to maintaining the authenticity of Uzbek cuisine and cooking. This can be achieved through the establishment of culinary schools and apprenticeship programs. These initiatives can not only improve the quality of culinary offerings, but also create employment opportunities in the gastronomic sector.

3. Infrastructure and facilities. Developing a modern culinary infrastructure is key to providing a high-quality experience for locals and tourists. This includes modernizing kitchens, establishing cooking schools, and creating vibrant food markets that showcase local produce. Such infrastructure investments will contribute to Uzbekistan's attractiveness as a gastronomic destination.

4. Advertising and Marketing. A comprehensive marketing strategy is needed to establish Uzbekistan as a leading gastronomic destination. The use of digital platforms, social media, and partnerships with travel agencies can effectively showcase the diverse and unique culinary experiences the country has to offer. Promotional campaigns should emphasize the authenticity of Uzbek cuisine and its cultural significance.

5. Culinary tourism events. Regular culinary events, festivals, and competitions play an important role in attracting local and international food enthusiasts. These events serve as a platform to showcase the richness and diversity of Uzbek cuisine, encouraging visitors to explore different regions of the country and participate in unique culinary experiences.

6. Community involvement. Engaging local communities is essential to the success of gastronomic tourism. Partnering with farmers, producers, and artisans ensures a sustainable and authentic supply chain for culinary ingredients. This involvement also economically empowers local communities, fostering a sense of pride and ownership in preserving their culinary heritage.

7. Sustainable practices. Integrating sustainable practices into the gastronomic tourism system is essential for long-term success. This includes promoting locally produced, seasonal ingredients, minimizing food waste, and adopting environmental initiatives. Sustainable gastronomic tourism not only benefits the environment, but also increases Uzbekistan's attractiveness as a responsible and conscious travel destination.

8. Collaboration with the hospitality industry. Collaboration with the hospitality industry is essential to creating a seamless and enjoyable guest experience. Developing integrated packages that combine cultural and culinary attractions with hotels, restaurants and other service providers will ensure that tourists have a comprehensive and immersive experience.

9. Education and awareness. It is essential to implement educational programs to raise awareness of the cultural and economic benefits of gastronomic tourism. Collaboration with educational institutions, tourism boards, and local communities will help foster a collective understanding of the importance of preserving and promoting Uzbekistan's culinary heritage.

Below we would like to offer some recommendations for the development of gastronomic tourism in Uzbekistan, as well as a number of measures to implement these recommendations.

First , Promoting a governance model that is transparent, participatory, and offers leadership . This for :

– Strategic plan for the development of gastronomic tourism - development of a "Roadmap" for the medium and long term, based on shared and consensus-based views among agents in line with this goal and the Sustainable Development Goals;

– Establishing a reciprocal value chain for gastronomic tourism, including agents from various sectors directly or indirectly related to gastronomy;

– establish mechanisms for state-to-state, public-private and cross-sector cooperation, communication and partnership between those involved in gastronomic tourism by location;

– creating tools that allow the different agents in the area to participate, share common principles, strengthen planning, decision-making and reach consensus on the policies necessary to achieve the desired scenario for gastronomic tourism;

– Provide institutional leadership and sufficient resources (both economic and human) to implement the action programs required by the strategy for the development of gastronomic tourism in Uzbekistan.

Secondly, to promote the recognition of local gastronomy as a cultural heritage: to strengthen the culinary identity, local products and gastronomy of the destination. To do this:

– creating an inventory of tangible and intangible heritage related to food (dishes, traditions, recipes, products, etc.) to form the basis for creating or renewing the gastronomic offer;

– develop programs to raise awareness of gastronomic culture and local products at various educational levels: primary and secondary, undergraduate, vocational education and universities;

– to help pass on the authenticity and values of gastronomic culture to future generations so that it is not lost;

– Develop and implement a program to protect and promote local products by strengthening relationships between producers, chefs, stores, consumers, etc.;

– Develop programs to encourage chefs to serve as regional interpreters;

– collaborate with other social agents to promote and socialize the benefits of local gastronomic culture and raise awareness among the population about the benefits of a healthy, sustainable diet with short-chain products;

- encourage local residents to be proud of their gastronomy and feel part of it;

- Manage quality marks and branding policies for endogenous food products to prevent standardization and loss of heritage value, while strengthening efforts to create appropriate branding, image and communication.

Third, take measures to improve the scenario, environment, places and the system for receiving gastronomic tourists. This for :

– Creating facilities to enhance gastronomic heritage: museums, venues, gastronomic centers, etc.;

– develop a plan and elements of signs for interpreting gastronomic heritage and programs aimed at enhancing the aesthetic and thematic aspects of gastronomy;

– Organizing events aimed at encouraging diverse communities to celebrate their gastronomic traditions, encourage pride in their community, and preserve their cultural identity;

– promoting thematic and expanded gastronomic content at tourist information offices and points in the region.

Fourth, to promote the creation and development of products and gastronomic tourism experiences linked to the endogenous potential of the destination. They should be innovative, distinctive and diverse in order to attract gastronomic tourists and help position the area as a gastronomic destination. To do this:

– compiling an inventory of gastronomic offers;

– identifying local gastronomic products with the greatest potential for introduction into the tourism market;

- promoting the most cultural aspect of gastronomy and how it is reflected in the social and economic life of the area by immersing tourists in the local gastronomic culture, allowing them to participate in local traditions, markets, festivals and festivals;

- promote the development of gastronomic tours to hard-to-reach sources as temporary or permanent products;

– creating geographical or thematic food routes (dishes, products, people, agricultural landscapes, etc.) that contribute to the socio-economic development of the entire region, help distribute tourism flows, strengthen and improve the local economy.

– creating product networks and centers of excellence by selecting the best offers according to certain standards;

– creation of product clubs that bring together a set of agents involved in the gastronomy of the region;

– organizing events to develop the sector, namely culinary competitions, gastronomic meetings, awards and recognitions, etc.;

- organizing special events and activities that will help attract tourists to the area, increase endogenous resources, provide visibility, and reduce seasonality;

– creating a gastronomic activity calendar, setting clear criteria for agents to participate in events that develop and enhance destination products and professionals;

- using technology to interpret and disseminate elements of gastronomic culture (virtual reality, Internet of Things, etc.).

In conclusion, a long-term strategy for developing gastronomic tourism in Uzbekistan includes preserving culture, developing skills, improving infrastructure, effective marketing, community engagement, and sustainable practices. By implementing these initiatives together, Uzbekistan can position itself as a leading gastronomic destination, attracting tourists seeking authentic cuisine, and enriching culinary experiences.
