ISSUES OF SPIRITUAL MATURATION AND ETHICS IN THE LEGACY OF AHMAD WISE

Milkboev Babur Zokirovich
Researcher of the National University of Uzbekistan

Annotation: This article will cover the issues of spiritual maturation and moral education based on the rich scientific and philosophical heritage of Ahmad Donish. In his works, wise defined the elevation of human spirituality as an important condition for the progress of society. In his view, a perfect society is a society of perfect people, and such people are formed through science, decency, justice, and conscience. In the course of the study, the views of Ahmad Donish on moral qualities, upbringing, honesty and social responsibility are analyzed and their inextricable relationship with today is substantiated. This article is aimed at exploring the possibilities of deep understanding of the spiritual and educational views of Ahmad Donish and their application in the modern system of upbringing.

Keywords: Ahmad wisdom, spiritual perfection, morality, upbringing, perfect man, honesty, decency, society, enlightenment, conscience, philosophy.

The study of human philosophy and the rise of the understanding of the human being to a new level the study of Man and his activities in society the development of philosophical views scientists, mainly Eastern thinkers, the formation of human ethics and the concept of a perfect person the question of what lies at its core, what qualities to see a person as a perfect person We have witnessed many changes and updates in the history of society, the formation of diverse views and ideas. But, how many times is a person's essence, morality, spirituality, and has been the focus of philosophers ever since.

In this regard, in the views of eastern alloms on human spiritual maturation, according to Farabi, spiritual maturation connects mental knowledge. The brain controls a person's knowledge, mental abilities, while the heart is the center that supplies all organs with the blood they need for life, all mental powers including the ability to know depend on a particular member. In his treatise “the virtues of Science and art”, phorobius argues that knowledge of nature is infinite, from knowledge of knowledge to knowledge of reason to knowledge of consequence, from qualities to substance-essence (Jawhar)from acstidenstia (al – oraz), science grows and deepens[1]. Science has revealed in its views that as it learns, knowledge of a person increases and, as a result, spiritual maturation can be achieved. The mind is an innate power to man. The mind is a spiritual process and believes that it is the result of education and upbringing. Having reason does not mean being educated, believing that having reason should end up following certain moral criteria. Speaking of an intelligent person, phorobius writes: "It is said to men who are intelligent that they are virtuous, sharp-minded, given to useful work, have an excellent talent for discovering and inventing the necessary things, are carried away from bad deeds. Such people are called wise. Those who have zehnidrok to come up with bad things cannot be called intelligent, they should be called cunning, deceiving”[2].

There is no deity to bypass Alisher Navoi's views when talking about spiritual perfection. Navoi has given many of his views and approaches on the issues of the human world, the perfect person, spiritual maturation. In the epic" Wonder-ul abror", komil covered his views on man. Navoi science-enlightenment leads a person to perfection, knowledge should be uninterrupted and regular, every person should strive to acquire knowledge throughout his life. Science believed that enlightenment was the basis of the progress of society. In addition to gaining knowledge, he emphasized moral qualities.

"Whoever is Adab birla is far from it,

The people of Khirad do not fit"[3]

The main emphasis in Navoi's work is also on the issue of a person, a spiritual person and moral qualities. An important aspect of education and upbringing is moral perfection, which makes a special emphasis on moral virtue.

In the eastern allomas of ethics, Ibn Sina also addresses the issue of ethics in each of his works separately. Synthesizes the foundations of Islam with metaphysics. In the science of morality, the main goal is to purify the soul. In his views , it is necessary to know the physical world and purify the soul as a result of the merger of the highest goal of the human soul with an active mind. Most of the evils in the universe and outside the bodies are obstacles on the way to the ultimate goal of "true happiness". The Thinker believes that true happiness comes after death, not in this world.

Ibn Sina, in his" wisdom", places a broader emphasis on the concept of wisdom, interpreting it as perfect cognition and perfect action . That is, wisdom makes a special emphasis not only on knowledge, but also on the fact that it is in motion. Since the relationship between man and society is wide-ranging, the moral parable will also be of particular importance in his views. He believes that man perceives the world through reason. Knowledge-when understanding things and phenomena by the human mind in a way that leaves no room for error and error in it, and if knowledge is confirmed by reliable evidence and real evidence, it is called wisdom[4].

Ibn Sina believes that in order to achieve moral perfection, a person must Barate defects in himself and have moral qualities such as humility, courage, justice.

Through the spiritual heritage of Imam Ghazzali, a special approach to issues of spiritual maturation and morality is revealed. Imam Ghazzali, considered a mature scholar of the Islamic world, looked at deeds from the point of view of human behavior and qualities. The scientist reveals the individual characteristics of a person in a religious orientation towards issues of morality. Science considers human activity as the main criterion that determines it. Man matures by obtaining science. "One's thinking extends, knows, knows, applies"[5]. In his opinion, a person achieves maturity by taking a year and following the years he has received.

The views of Eastern thinkers and their approach the influence of Islamic philosophy developed the donnish views. Special emphasis is placed on knowledge in the matter of spiritual perfection and morality of a person. The perfection of a person is seen as coming after his workfulness and work. "The commandments are easy to look at and go into big business, making him mature from the habit of working. ... the shortcomings that surround a person are due to his laziness, and the appearance of perfection in him, as he was born, is due to his workability[6].

The fact that a person receives a salary worthy of his work of lust and his act of hard work is a sign that he indicates his level of perfection. The spirit may have been pydo from olloch's command. There is no reason to know its truth. Adam is incapable of knowing him because he is mentally limitless and incompetent. The mind cannot express itself by finding a way to be higher than it is. But the mind is able to perceive those who are in the abyss from itself and bring it to words. And the mind comes from arshi Rahman. A similar spirit work is not capable of knowing its truth, as is the case with arch. Therefore, those who returned from thinking in the olloch breed. Because the lack of intelligence can enter the path of irreligion. In his opinion, the human soul is not inside it, nor outside it, the eloquence of emasinson's ego is also called intelligence.

In conclusion, it can be said that the spiritual and moral views of Ahmad Donish are an example of progressive socio-philosophical thought of their time and are also important for today. He sees man as a being striving for spiritual maturity and moral purity, and visualizes the sustainable development of society through just such people. Wisdom claims that thirst for science, decency, honesty, hard work and conscience-serve as the basis of human perfection.

In the modern socio-spiritual environment, Ahmad occupies an important place in the study of wisdom views and their application to the process of upbringing, in the formation of noble qualities in the younger generation. The heritage of wisdom is rich not only in historical, but also in practical values, it is an invaluable resource in building a society with a strong spiritual foundation.
