Annotation:This article explores effective methods of introducing preschool children to Karakalpak folk tales, emphasizing the role of storytelling in the moral, cultural and emotional development of preschool pupils. The study discusses interactive techniques, such as dramatization, visual aids, and play-based learning to engage children's imagination and interest. By integrating Karakalpak folklore into early childhood education, educators can foster a sense of cultural identity, enhance language skills, and instill universal values through traditional narratives.

Key words: Karakalpak folk tales, storytelling, cultural heritage, early childhood development, interactive teaching methods, folklore integration

INTRODUCTION

Nowadays, digital technologies are playing an increasingly vital role in preschool education. The integration of modern technological tools into this system makes the learning process for children more interactive, enjoyable, and efficient. Simultaneously, one of the essential goals of education remains the preservation of national heritage and its transmission to future generations. Given Uzbekistan's diverse population and its abundant cultural legacy, it is essential to acquaint children with the distinct cultures of each ethnic group.

The rich folklore heritage of the Karakalpak people holds a special place in nurturing children with a strong sense of national identity and cultural values. For preschool children, folk tales and poems are not only a means of moral education but also play a significant role in developing speech, expanding imagination, and shaping aesthetic perception.

Phraseological units in the Karakalpak language are widely used in proverbs and sayings. They also appear in the structure of phraseological units. Therefore, considering proverbs and sayings as a type of phraseology or recognizing them as a unit that is independent of phraseology requires a lot of deep and extensive scientific research. It is said that proverbs should be considered separately, not as a part of phraseological units, but independentlyof them, in the form of a sentence with figurative qualities, containing relevant units -expressive, meaningful meanings.

Material and methods:

Karakalpak folk tales and children's poems serve as carriers of national values, reflecting the customs, traditions, and worldview of the people, passing them down from one generation to the next. These folk narratives and poetic works not only teach moral values but also support children's speech development and stimulate creative thinking in their mother tongue. However, as modern children grow up in a digital environment, innovative and engaging methods are necessary to effectively convey this cultural heritage to them. Fairy tales play an important role in shaping children's worldview. By immersing themselves in the magical world of fairy tales, children form their first impressions and develop feelings of love for goodness and disdain for evil. Fairy tales reflect the positive ideas and artistic imagery born from the imagination of any nation (1).

Through storytelling, children engage in active listening, understand the content, and gradually learn to retell or creatively reinterpret the story in their own words. This shift from passive reception to active language production is crucial for developing fluent oral communication. Specifically, when working with Karakalpak folk tales, storytelling supports children in several ways:

• Broadening their vocabulary through meaningful context
• Improving sentence construction and fluency
• Strengthening listening skills and critical thinking abilities
• Nurturing imagination and fostering a sense of cultural identity

There are a lot of similar motives and plots in the above -mentioned fairy tales. It should be noted that the Tatar and Karakalpak folk tales have common features. In particular, the names of fairy tales, the names of the heroes and words are very similar to each other: Timur, Kesh, Kish (evening), tyn, warm (night), “tan” (dawn), Kamir (dough), Saran (mean), Yumart (Zhomart, generous), lobby (flower), pelvis (bald), Altynshesh, Altynshash (golden hair), Bai (rich), Kobyz (ancient Karakalpak musical instrument) and others (4).

There is a "three brothers" motive in both the Kyrgyz folktale "Asan" and the Karakalpak folktale "Asan Genzhe". In the Kyrgyz folktale, two older brothers treat their younger brother Asan rudely, while in the Karakalpak folktale, Asan has good relations with his older brothers and helps them. The father of the three brothers is the king in both fairy tales; in the Kyrgyz fairy tale, the brothers' father is referred to as a khan, and in the Karakalpak folk tales of the ruler, the "Patsha" (Padishah) is known. The Karakalpak folk tale "Gulziyba" tells the story of a king and his daughter named Gulziyba. She wants to marry the vizier's son. They want to move to distant lands. But the vizier's child falls asleep on the agreed day. The girl unknowingly goes out with another robber.

Then Gulziba runs away from the robber. She marries the shepherd's son. The king of this country falls in love with Gulziba. Then he sends the shepherd to dangerous work. In other words, the shepherd goes to a place where there is no way back. The hero performs difficult tasks with the help of magical objects.

Karakalpak folk tales have similarities and commonalities with the examples of oral creativity of neighboring related peoples. In particular, Karakalpak folk tales have a meaningful relationship with related Kazakh, Uzbek, Kyrgyz, Turkmen and others (5).

Results and discussion:

Educators can enhance speech development by applying methods such as dramatization, role-playing, and the use of visual materials to encourage verbal participation during and after the storytelling process.

To effectively integrate Karakalpak folk tales into speech development programs, teachers can follow a series of steps:

1. Pre-listening phase: Familiarizing children with key vocabulary, main characters, and cultural background
2. Listening and interactive discussion: Facilitating comprehension through open-ended questions and dialogue
3. Post-listening activities: Engaging children in retelling the story, illustrating scenes, participating in role-play, or inventing new story endings

This systematic approach ensures that children are not only entertained but are also actively involved in language development and cognitive engagement throughout the storytelling experience(2).

One of the key aspects of storytelling is how a tale begins, as it sets the tone and captures the listener’s attention. For preschool children, it is important to use simple and clear openings that are easy to understand and remember (3). Below are some classic and effective fairy tale openings that can be used in early childhood education:

1. Once upon a time, there was a…

This is one of the most universal openings in fairy tales. It immediately takes children into a magical story world and builds anticipation.

2. Long, long ago, in a faraway land…

This phrase helps children imagine distant places and times, stimulating their curiosity and sense of wonder.

CONCLUSION:

Incorporating Karakalpak folk tales into preschool education plays a significant role in preserving cultural heritage while simultaneously supporting children's speech and cognitive development. Storytelling transitions children from passive listeners to active participants, enhancing their vocabulary, sentence structure, and creative thinking skills in their native language.

Given the growing influence of digital technologies on modern children, it is essential to adopt innovative methods such as dramatization, role-play, and visual aids to make traditional narratives engaging and effective.

Structured storytelling techniques, including pre-listening activities, interactive discussions, and post-listening tasks, ensure that children are not only entertained but are actively involved in linguistic and cultural learning processes. Through these approaches, educators can instill a deep appreciation for national values and traditions, fostering both linguistic fluency and cultural identity in young learners.
